NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD,
Respondent.

On Petition to Set Aside Decision and Order of the National Labor Relations Board

PETITIONER'S REPLY BRIEF

I

THE EVIDENCE RELIED UPON BY THE BOARD THAT MARTINEZ WAS UNLAWFULLY LAID OFF IS INSUB-STANTIAL AND DOES NOT SUPPORT THE BOARD'S CONCLUSION.

At pages 5-7 of Petitioner's Opening Brief, cases were cited from the Second, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and District of Columbia Circuits, all clearly establishing that the Board's Decision in this case is contrary to the evidence and is not supported by substantial evidence considering the record as a whole.

1 The Board has failed wholly to meet these cases 2 and, instead, has sought to ignore them by saying that 3 they are of "ho aid" in resolving the present case. (Board's 4 Br., p. 7.) Considering that the cited cases from so 5 many circuits are adverse to the Board in the present case, 6 it is understandable that the Board would like to ignore 7 them--and an analysis of the cases shows why:

8 Second Circuit:

9 In Bon-R Reproductions, Inc. v. NLRB, 309 F.2d
10 898 (2 Cir.1962), there was evidence that the discharged
11 employee admitted to his employer that he was responsible 12 for the union's presence (309 F.2d at 901-02) and the 13 court sustained the Board's conclusion that the employer 14 violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening his 15 employees (309 F.2d at 903). However, the court reversed
16 the Board's conclusion that the employee was discrimina-17 torily discharged and rejected, as a basis for showing 18 discrimination, certain ambiguous remarks made by the 19 employer (309 F.2d at 906-07):

20
21 "In our judgment, to hang so much on the slim 22 peg of a few ambiguous sentences is to allow an 23 excerpt of the record to swallow up the whole,
24 something which Universal Camera, supra, forbids.
25 Without giving controlling effect to any one 26 element, we think that the facts surrounding

1 Scrima's discharge, coupled with the examiner's 2 finding on credibility, make up a record which 3 permits only one conclusion. In the light of 4 this record, any other conclusion would amount 5 to a decision, supported neither by reason nor 6 the statute, that even the least improper re-
7 marks made in the course of discharging an em-
8 ployee render the discharge an unfair labor 9 practice."

10
11 The Board in the present case, as in the Bon-R
12 Reproductions case, is hanging its conclusion that Mar-13 tinez was discriminated against on "the slim peg of a 14 few ambiguous sentences." For example, the Board com-
15 plains (Board's Br., p. 3) that Laguna told Juan Baltierra 16 that Ocariz had some "infernal machinations," that 17 Ocariz was nobody there at the plant, and that Baltierra, 18 by paying attention to Ocariz, would go down in rank.

19 None of these statements in any way referred to the Union.

20 Likewise, the Board complains that, when Martinez
21 admitted that he was still a member of the Union, Laguna 22 replied "You know best." (Board's Br., p. 4.) Certainly, 23 this remark shows no animosity; to the contrary, it shows 24 a complete hands-off policy.

25 Fourth Circuit:

26 In NLRB v. Threads, Incorporated, 308 F.2d 1,

1 11-13 (4 Cir.1962), Bell was a known union adherent who 2 did bad work on several occasions and also violated com-3 pany rules. He was reprimanded but not disciplined for 4 these lapses. Finally, following an absence from his 5 machine, he was discharged. The Board determined that 6 Bell was discriminatorily discharged, saying (308 F.2d 7 at 12-13) that the company's other unfair labor practices 8 furnished a sufficient basis for a finding that the com-9 pany "utilized Bell's absences from his machine as a 10 pretext and that it discharged him because of his union
11 adherence." In reversing the Board, the Fourth Circuit 12 said (308 F.2d at 13):

13
14 "Thus the Board undertook to impose a double 15 standard as to the value of 'background evidence.' 16 On the one hand, throughout its order, the 17 Board emphasized all of the elaborately detailed 18 background evidence which it considered to be 19 adverse to the Company's position and favorable
20 to the Union's position. But, on the other hand, 21 when the Company showed that it had tolerated
22 Bell's misconduct, carelessness and disobedience
23 for a long time after learning of his union
24 affiliation and adherence, the Board lightly
25 dismissed all such evidence with the statement:
26 'The fact that Bell damaged property or committed

1 derelictions on other earlier occasions is im-
2 material as the Respondent [Company] did not 3 purport to discharge him for any such alleged 4 misconduct.' (Emphasis supplied.)

5 "But, what is much more serious and dis-6 turbing, the Board has either overlooked or 7 ignored the admonition of this court that there 8 is no legal basis for finding that the assigned 9 reason for a discharge is nothing but a 'pretext'
10 where it is shown, as here, that prior misconduct
11 of an employee was tolerated under circumstances 12 which negate any idea that the employer was 13 searching for some false reason to discharge 14 the employee on account of his union activities.
15 In Martel Mills Corp.v.National Labor Relations
16 Board, 114 F.2d 624, 632 (4th Cir.1940), this 17 court stated:

18 " * * * Had the Martel Mills desired to 19 discharge Whittle for his union affiliations, it 20 could very easily have selected one of the 21 occasions when Whittle had violated the company rul
22 or one of the occasions when his fellow-workers 23 complained of his actions. Instead, it allowed 24 these complaints and disturbances to accumulate 25 until a time when the record of the individual 26 employee served as one of the bases for

1 maintaining or discharging him.'" (Emphasis
2 the court's.)

3
4 In the present case, as in the Threads case, the 5 Board seeks "to impose a double standard."

6 Despite the fact that the Trial Examiner and the 7 Board found that:

- 8
9 1. Martinez let a stranger operate his linotype machine
10 (TXD, pp. 4-5);
- 11 2. Martinez left the plant and left his machine running 12 (ibid.);
- 13 3. Martinez came to the plant while off duty and drunk 14 and tried to start a fight (ibid.);
- 15 4. Martinez marked a time card (ibid.);
- 16 5. Martinez parked his car in a space needed to load 17 mail bags (ibid.);
- 18 6. Martinez' denials of misdeeds or reprimands were not 19 to be credited (id., p. 5);
- 20 7. Martinez' denials were evasive in most instances (ibid.);
- 21 8. Martinez' testimony on the above instances reflect 22 generally on his credibility as a witness (ibid.);
- 23 9. Martinez had more instances of objectionable conduct
24 to his credit than the one employee junior to him
25 (id., pp. 8-9),

26 the Trial Examiner and the Board then say that since

1 "In the eyes of Respondent the instances of misconduct, 2 occurring over the three years of his employment, were 3 not of such magnitude as to warrant discharge; in fact, 4 it did not prejudice his recall to employment at the very 5 first opening in February, 1964" (id., p. 9) and since 6 "I find that Respondent has not seriously regarded Mar-7 tinez' misdeeds" (id., p. 11), therefore Martinez was 8 laid off because he failed and refused to abandon the 9 Union (ibid.).

10 In its brief, the Board advances the same
11 contentions. (Board's Br., p. 11.)

12 The "double standard" applied by the Board is 13 clear. In the first place, the Company (as noted by the 14 Trial Examiner and the Board, TXD, p. 5) has never contended 15 that Martinez was discharged for cause, but merely that, 16 when the Company was confronted with the necessity of 17 having to lay off an employee, Martinez was selected 18 because he was not as good an employee as the only employee 19 junior to him. If the Company had been searching for a 20 pretext to discharge Martinez because of his union ac-21 tivities, "it could very easily have selected one of the 22 occasions when [Martinez] had violated the company rules
23 or one of the occasions when his fellow-workers comp-
24 lained of his actions. Instead, it allowed these complaints
25 and disturbances to accumulate until a time when the record 26 of the individual employee served as one of the bases for

1 maintaining or discharging him." NLRB v. Threads, 2 Incorporated, supra, 308 F.2d at 13.

3 In the second place, if the Company really 4 wanted to get rid of Martinez because of his union ac-5 tivities, it is incomprehensible that Lozano would have 6 promised to recall him at the very first opportunity, 7 as found by the Board (TXD, p. 7), and that he was in fact
8 recalled at the first opening, as found by the Board
9 (Id., p. 9; p. 10).

11 "If discrimination may be inferred from mere 12 participation in union organization and activity
13 followed by a discharge, that inference disap-
14 pears when a reasonable explanation is presented 15 to show that it was not a discharge for union 16 membership."

17 NLRB v. United Brass Works, Inc.,
18 287 F.2d 689, 693 (4 Cir.1961).

19
20 Fifth Circuit:

21 In NLRB v. Huber & Huber Motor Exp., 223 F.2d
22 748 (5 Cir.1955), there was evidence that the discharged
23 employee had been obnoxious and aggressive in the per-24 formance of certain protected union activities. He also 25 failed to comply with a company rule. In reversing the 26 Board's determination that the employee had been dis-

1 criminatorily discharged and that the rule violation 2 "was only a shadow, but opportune pretext" to screen the 3 true motive for the discharge, the court said (223 F.2d 4 at 749):

5
6 ". . . [W]here the Board could as reasonably 7 infer a proper collateral motive as an unlawful 8 one, the act of management cannot be set aside
9 by the Board as being improperly motivated.

10 National Labor Relations Board v. Houston Chronicle
11 Publishing Company, 5 Cir., 211 F.2d 848.

12 National Labor Relations Board v. Blue Bell Inc., 13 5 Cir., 220 F.2d.

14 "Where a legal ground for discharge existed - 15 as it did in this case - and the employee was 16 discharged on that ground alone, obnoxious
17 conduct on his part, in an activity protected
18 by Section 7 of the Act, will not insulate him
19 from being discharged on such legal ground." 20

21 In the present case, the Trial Examiner and the 22 Board found that "it necessarily follows that to maintain 23 this quota of employees in this department, one employee 24 would have to be terminated to make a position available
25 for Villasenor." (TXD, p. 3.)

26 Martinez testified that at the time of his lay-off,

1 Laguna told him that it was for discriminatory purposes 2 (id., p. 6). This was denied by Laguna (ibid.). The 3 Trial Examiner and the Board specifically discredited
4 Martinez' version and credited Laguna's, and found no
5 such "crucial" statement, indicating a discriminatory
6 motive, was made by Laguna (ibid.). The Trial Examiner 7 and the Board also discredited Martinez' testimony that 8 Lozano told him that "other obligations" dictated the 9 choice of Martinez for the lay-off (id., p. 7).

10 The Trial Examiner and the Board also found that 11 Martinez had more instances of objectionable conduct to 12 his credit than the one employee junior to him (id., pp.
13 8-9).

14 Thus, the sole ground given to Martinez in his 15 notice of the lay-off, as found by the Trial Examiner
16 and the Board, was the reinstatement of Villasenor.
17 As in the Huber & Huber case (223 F.2d at 749), "the 18 parties are not in dispute that the sole ground in the 19 notice of discharge" was to make room for Villasenor and 20 "where the Board could as reasonably infer a proper 21 collateral motive as an unlawful one, the act of the 22 management cannot be set aside by the Board as being 23 improperly motivated."

24 The slim basis upon which the Trial Examiner and 25 the Board found that Laguna was discriminatory against 26 Martinez was Martinez' testimony that, upon occasion,

1 Laguna solicited Martinez to abandon the Union (TXD, 2 pp. 7-8). The Trial Examiner and the Board did not 3 credit Laguna's denials of these solicitations (id., p. 8).

4 At the same time, however, the Trial Examiner and 5 the Board characterized other of Martinez' testimony as 6 "evasive" (id., p. 5) and questioned his general credibility
7 as a witness (ibid.). The Trial Examiner and the Board
8 expressly discredited Martinez' testimony seven distinct 9 times (id., p. 5, line 11; p. 5, lines 23-24; p. 5, line 10 35; p. 6, lines 34-38; p. 6, lines 41-42; p. 7, lines 11 21-22; p. 8, lines 31-32).

12 Further, the Trial Examiner and the Board say 13 that the testimony of Martinez "to the solicitations
14 to abandon the Union is supported by the credible testimony 15 of Baltierra and Villasenor" (id., p. 8); however, the 16 transcript may be searched in vain for any testimony by 17 Baltierra or Villasenor that they ever heard any such 18 solicitations by Laguna to Martinez.

19 In addition, the Trial Examiner and the Board
20 expressly concluded that none of such solicitations
21 constituted threats or promises or were independent 22 8(a)(1) violations (id., p. 7; p. 9; p. 10) and 23 that Martinez was not laid off because of having testified 24 at a prior hearing (id., p. 10; p. 11).

25 Further, the Trial Examiner and the Board found 26 that Laguna even went so far in his friendship for

1 Martinez as to have his wife help Martinez' wife when 2 she had a baby (id., p. 8); this is not consistent with 3 an "animus" against Martinez.

4 Considering the Trial Examiner's and the Board's 5 general discrediting of Martinez as a witness; their 6 findings that no discriminatory statements were made at 7 the time of Martinez' lay-off; their conclusions of no 8 independent 8(a)(1) or 8(a)(4) violations; their finding 9 that room had to be made for the return of Villasenor;
10 their finding that Martinez was the most junior but one of 11 the employees, but had more instances of objectionable 12 conduct - considering all these factors, it is incredible
13 that the Trial Examiner and the Board can, with a straight 14 face, contend that there has been discrimination.

15 The situation is parallel to that in NLRB v.
16 Florida Steel Corp., 308 F.2d 931, 935 (5 Cir.1962),
17 where, in reversing the Board's finding of discrimination, 18 the court was critical of the undue probative value given by 19 the Trial Examiner and the Board to the testimony of a 20 chief witness who, just as with Martinez in the present
21 case, was specifically discredited by the Trial Examiner.

22 Sixth Circuit:

23 In NLRB v. Dixie Terminal Co., 210 F.2d 538 (6 Cir.
24 1954), employee Ross participated in union activities and 25 also refused to take over the job of starter of a pas-
26 senger elevator. The Board found that Ross was discharged

1 because of his union activities. In reversing the Board,
2 the court said (210 F.2d at 540):

3
4 "We are also of the opinion that the discharge
5 of Ross was justified by Ross's refusal to ac-6 cept his assignment of duty. The fact that he 7 was participating in organizing the union does 8 not prevent his discharge for cause. N.L.R.B. v.
9 West Ohio Gas Co., 6 Cir., 172 F.2d 685, 688;
10 N.L.R.B. v. Mylan-Sparta Co., 6 Cir., 166 F.2d 11 485, 491."

12
13 In the present case, Martinez, as found by the 14 Trial Examiner and the Board, had more instances of 15 objectionable conduct to his credit than the one employee 16 junior to him; the fact that he was a union member does not 17 prevent his being selected for lay-off in lieu of a better 18 employee.

19 Seventh Circuit:

20 In NLRB v. Milwaukee Elec. Tool Corp., 237 F.2d
21 75 (7 Cir.1956), the discharged employee was an active 22 union supporter and the company's president had testified 23 that he felt that an employee who attempted to influence 24 other employees to join the union by telling them they 25 would have to join was engaged in sufficient disloyalty 26 to warrant discharge. In reversing the Board's finding of

1 a discriminatory discharge, the court said (237 F.2d at 2 78):

3
4 "As we read the Board's argument, studded
5 with handpicked fragments of evidence, it collides 6 with several pertinent propositions stated by 7 Judge Lindley when delivering the majority
8 opinion reported as N.L.R.B. v. Wagner Iron 9 Works, 7 Cir., 1955, 220 F.2d 126, 133: 'Obviously,
10 the Act does not interfere with the employer's 11 right to conduct his business, and, in doing so, 12 to select and discharge his employees. It 13 proscribes the exercise of the right to hire and 14 fire only when it is employed as a discriminatory 15 device. [Citing.] The Board may not "sub-16 stitute its judgment for that of the employer as 17 to what is sufficient cause for discharge" 18 [citing] and discrimination may not be infer-19 red from an employee's mere membership in a 20 union. [Citing.] * * *'

21 "The utterances of Siebert are, on this 22 record, insufficient to make the discharge of 23 Stempniewski more than suspect, but not dis-
24 criminatory. They fail, in our opinion, to support 25 the Board's findings in this regard."

1 In the present case, in the light of the Trial
2 Examiner's and the Board's findings that there were no
3 independent 8(a)(1) or 8(a)(4) violations, that Martinez'
4 testimony that discriminatory reasons were given to him
5 for his lay-off could not be believed, that Martinez
6 had more instances of objectionable conduct to his credit 7 than the one employee junior to him, and that someone had 8 to be laid off to make room for Villaseñor, the Board's 9 brief, referring as it does to such vague statements as 10 "infernal machinations" and "You know best," presents
11 an argument "studded with handpicked fragments of evidence" 12 that, even considered in their worst light, are "in-13 sufficient to make [the lay-off of Martinez] more than 14 suspect, but not discriminatory."

15 Eighth Circuit:

16 In NLRB v. Ace' Comb Company, 342 F.2d 841 (8 17 Cir.1965), unlike the present case, it was found by the 18 Board and sustained by the court that the company had 19 engaged in independent threatening and coercive conduct.
20 There was thus more evidence of anti-union animus than 21 there is in the present case, where both the Trial Ex-
22 aminer and the Board have found no independent 8(a)(1)
23 violations. However, the court reversed the Board's 24 determination that the employee was discriminatorily
25 discharged and, after reviewing the applicable general 26 principles of law prescribed by the United States Supreme

1 Court, the Second, Third, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth
2 and Ninth Circuits (342 F.2d at 847-48), held (quoting 3 from the Ninth Circuit) as follows, in words particularly 4 in point to the present case (342 F.2d at 848):

5
6 "In other words, here the evidence abounds
7 that there was a justifiable cause for Woodliff's
8 discharge. Assigning an illegal cause therefor 9 is only possible by drawing an inference from 10 certain vague statements on the part of manage-11 ment officials, while ignoring positive evidence
12 arrayed against such inferences. 'Circumstances
13 that merely raise a suspicion that an employer 14 may be activated by unlawful motives are not 15 sufficiently substantial to support a finding.'
16 N.L.R.B. v. Citizen-News Co., 134 F.2d 970, 17 974 (9 Cir.1943). This being so, we cannot 18 conscientiously hold that the record as a whole 19 contains substantial evidence that the discharge
20 of Woodliff was motivated by other than lawful 21 business reasons."

22
23 In the present case, the evidence (and the findings 24 of the Trial Examiner and the Board) abound that there 25 was justifiable cause for Martinez' lay-off, including the 26 necessity to lay off someone, Martinez' low seniority, and

1 the fact that the one more junior employee was a better
2 employee. To assign an illegal cause for his lay-off 3 "is only possible by drawing an inference from certain 4 vague statements on the part of management officials, 5 while ignoring positive evidence arrayed against such 6 inferences."

7 Here, the Board seems to think it has support 8 for its case in the fact that the Company discussed the 9 lay-off with its attorney and was advised that the surest 10 way to stay out of trouble was to follow strict seniority, 11 but that the Company disregarded this advice. (Board's 12 Br., p. 5-6.) This is just the sort of inference that is 13 condemned in the Ace Comb case. If anything, the Company's 14 seeking the advice of its attorney, being concerned about 15 the discriminatory implications, and still selecting 16 Martinez for the lay-off shows that the motive in picking 17 Martinez was non-discriminatory.

18 Ninth Circuit:

19 One of the earliest cases involving the subject
20 matter of the present case, and the case which is control-
21 ling here, is NLRB v. Citizen-News Co., 134 F.2d 970
22 (9 Cir.1943), where this Court reversed the Board's 23 determination that a discharge was discriminatory, and in 24 language directly in point to the present case where the 25 evidence shows, and the Board has found, that Villasenor's
26 return was a valid reason for the lay-off, that Martinez

1 was the most junior but one of the employees, and that that 2 employee was a better employee, said (134 F.2d at 973-
3 74):

4
5 "In considering this question it should 6 be emphasized that the right to terminate a 7 contract of employment is a constitutional right
8 of the utmost importance. The mere discharge 9 of an employee with or without reason is therefore 10 not evidence of intent to affect labor unions 11 or the rights of employees under the National 12 Labor Relations Act. . . . Circumstances that 13 merely raise a suspicion that an employer may 14 be activated by unlawful motives are not 15 sufficiently substantial to support a finding.

16 "The fact that a discharged employee may 17 be engaged in labor union activities at the time 18 of his discharge, taken alone, is no evidence at 19 all of a discharge as the result of such activities
20 There must be more than this to constitute sub-21 stantial evidence."

22
23 In the present case, the Board apparently finds 24 it "suspicious" that, shortly after one of the instances 25 of his misconduct, Martinez was transferred to the 26 night shift from the substitute position, thus getting a

1 wage premium (Board's Br., p. 11). The Board apparently 2 infers that this was a "promotion" for Martinez, hence
3 his misconduct was not regarded seriously by the Company, 4 hence it could not have been a reason for his lay-off, 5 hence the only remaining reason had to be discriminatory.
6 This reasoning, however, ignores the explicit finding of the 7 Trial Examiner and the Board that, whether or not Martinez'
8 instances of misconduct were sufficiently serious to cause 9 his discharge, they were at least more numerous than those 10 of the only employee junior to him. It is wholly immaterial 11 whether or not the misconduct was sufficiently serious to 12 cause his discharge or to prevent his recall - the issue
13 is not whether the Company had grounds for discharging 14 Martinez for cause, but whether, when a lay-off (as 15 distinguished from a discharge) was necessary, Martinez 16 was as good an employee as the only one junior to him.
17 Both the Trial Examiner and the Board have found that 18 he was not, and it is irrelevant that the Company may have 19 earlier tolerated his misconduct.

20 In any event, the transfer of Martinez from the 21 substitute position to the night shift, with its wage 22 premium for working at night, was in no way a "promotion."
23 The uncontradicted evidence is that Martinez was put on 24 the night shift because Barunda was made the substitute 25 worker because he was "the more desirable employee to work 26 alone without direct supervision" (TXD, p. 5).

1 On the other hand, if the night shift be considered 2 an advancement, Martinez' "dues paying status with the 3 Union did not interfere with his advancement" (id., p. 9), 4 and it then becomes absurd to say, as does the Board, that 5 because the Company "advanced" Martinez despite his union
6 membership this proves that when he was laid off, 7 it was because of his union membership. This is exactly 8 the 180-degree swing criticized and rejected in NLRB v.
9 Sebastopol Apple Growers Union, 269 F.2d 705, 713 (9 Cir.
10 1959), citing from NLRB v. McGahey, 233 F.2d 406, 412
11 (5 Cir.1956):

12
13 "The Board's error is the frequent one in 14 which the existence of the reasons stated by 15 the employer as the basis for the discharge is 16 evaluated in terms of its reasonableness. If 17 the discharge was excessively harsh, if the lesser 18 forms of discipline would have been adequate, if 19 the discharged employee was more, or just as, 20 capable as the one left to do the job, or the 21 like then, the argument runs, the employer must 22 not actually have been motivated by managerial 23 considerations, and (here a full 180 degree swing 24 is made) the stated reason thus dissipated as 25 pretense, nought remains but antiunion purpose as 26 the explanation. But as we have so often said:

1 management is for management. Neither Board nor 2 Court can second-guess it or give it gentle
3 guidance by over-the-shoulder supervision.
4 Management can discharge for good cause, or bad
5 cause, or no cause at all. It has, as the master 6 of its own business affairs, complete freedom 7 with but one specific, definite qualification:
8 it may not discharge when the real motivating
9 purpose is to do that which Section 8(a)(3) forbids.

11 District of Columbia Circuit:

12 The District of Columbia Circuit is in accord with 13 all of the other cited Circuits.

14 In Metal Processors' Union Local No. 16, AFL-CIO v.
15 NLRB, 337 F.2d 114 (DC Cir.1964), in sustaining the Board's 16 determination that a discharge was not discriminatory
17 despite the fact that the employee had engaged in union
18 activities preceding his discharge, the court points out 19 that there was no evidence to indicate company hostility 20 toward the employee and that differences between the 21 foreman and the employee were amicably worked out (337 22 F.2d at 117). This is parallel to the present case, where 23 Martinez' wife helped the foreman Laguna's wife when she 24 had a baby (TXD, p. 8), and where the so-called sollicita-
25 tions by Laguna to Martinez to leave the Union carried no
26 hostility (Board's Br., p. 4), and where the Trial Examiner

1 and the Board specifically found no evidence of independent
2 threats or coercion (TXD, p. 7), and where the Trial
3 Examiner and the Board found that Martinez' advancement 4 was not impeded by his Union membership (id., p. 9).
5 As said in the Metal Processors' Union case (337 F.2d at 117)

6
7 "The Union argues further that the Board
8 erred in rejecting certain evidence which, it
9 is said, established general Company hostility 10 toward the Union, from which, in turn, it may be 11 inferred that Zajac's discharge was discriminatory.
12 With this we cannot agree. Even if it were assumed 13 arguendo that the evidence referred to did 14 establish general Company animosity toward the 15 Union, it would be insufficient in itself to 16 ground the inference that Zajac's discharge was 17 violative of the Act. As the court in N.L.R.B. v.
18 Redwing Carriers, Inc., 284 F.2d 397, 402
19 (5th Cir.1960), observed:

20 "The opposition of an employer to union 21 organization and even unlawful interference are 22 not enough without more to make the discharge of 23 an employee wrongful. N.L.R.B. v. Hudson Pulp
24 & Paper Corp., 5 Cir., 273 F.2d 660; N.L.R.B. v.
25 McGahey, 5 Cir., 233 F.2d 406."

CONCLUSION

1
2 This is a case where the Board's decision, predicated 3 solely upon a few ambiguous statements attributed to 4 management or upon a few non-hostile solicitations to 5 Martinez to leave the Union or upon some old statements
6 made in 1961 in another case (Board's Br., pp. 3-4, 7 pp. 8-9), finds discrimination. But the Board's decision
8 is contrary to court decisions in the Second, Fourth, Fifth,
9 Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and District of Columbia
10 Circuits. It is grounded upon speculation and mere sus-11 picion. It is contrary to its own findings as to the 12 relative merit of Martinez compared to the only employee 13 junior to him. It involves 180-degree swings, finding, 14 as it does, that Martinez was advanced despite his union 15 membership and then laid off because of it and then 16 later re-called despite it. It discredits Martinez as 17 a witness seven times, including his general credibility, 18 and then gives undue probative value to his testimony that 19 he was solicited to leave the Union.

20 This is a case where, unsupported by the evidence, 21 and in fact contrary to its own findings on Martinez'
22 comparative merit, the Board has determined that there
23 was discrimination. But the mere fact that the Board 24 says that there was discrimination does not make it so;
25 the Board's determination cannot exist without the support 26 of substantial evidence.
